There have plenty of headlines the last few years about computer security breaches. Recently the Equifax breach highlighted how everyone's information is vulnerable and that vulnerability is beyond our control. There have been countless others before Equifax and yet best I can tell the only true driver of security standards are compliance regulations that are implemented by the very people that build the vulnerable systems, to begin with. The process of implementation and maintenance of these regulation standards is also very heavily weighted in case-by-case human decision making...
