

IMPORTANT: SBA Update on “Good-Faith Certification” for PPP Loans

May 13, 2020

The SBA released additional guidance on the required good-faith certification regarding the necessity of PPP loans. Key points:

- Any borrower who, when combined with its affiliates, received loans less than $2 million in the aggregate is treated to have made the certification in good faith. They are presumed to have been “less likely to have had access to adequate sources of liquidity.”
- Any borrower with loans greater than $2 million (again, in the aggregate considering loans made to its affiliates) may still have an adequate basis for making the required certification. The SBA will review all loans in excess of $2 million (and other loans “as appropriate”) to assess compliance with this certification. If the SBA determines inadequate basis for making the certification, the SBA will inform the lender that the loan is not eligible for forgiveness and will seek repayment of the loan.
- If a borrower is asked to repay the loan and does so, the SBA will not pursue administrative enforcement or referral to other agencies.

The full text of the guidance, published as “FAQ #46,” is copied below.

Question: How will SBA review borrowers’ required good-faith certification concerning the necessity of their loan request?

Answer: When submitting a PPP application, all borrowers must certify in good faith that “[c]urrent economic uncertainty makes this loan request necessary to support the ongoing operations of the Applicant.” SBA, in consultation with the Department of the Treasury, has determined that the following safe harbor will apply to SBA’s review of PPP loans with respect to this issue: Any borrower that, together with its affiliates, received PPP loans with an original principal amount of less than $2 million will be deemed to have made the required certification concerning the necessity of the loan request in good faith.

SBA has determined that this safe harbor is appropriate because borrowers with loans below this threshold are generally less likely to have had access to adequate sources of liquidity in the current economic environment than borrowers that obtained larger loans. This safe harbor will also promote economic certainty as PPP borrowers with more limited resources endeavor to retain and rehire employees. In addition, given the large volume of PPP loans, this approach will enable SBA to conserve its finite audit resources and focus its reviews on larger loans, where the compliance effort may yield higher returns.

Importantly, borrowers with loans greater than $2 million that do not satisfy this safe harbor may still have an adequate basis for making the required good-faith certification, based on their individual circumstances in light of the language of the certification and SBA guidance. SBA has previously stated that all PPP loans in excess of $2 million, and other PPP loans as appropriate, will be subject to review by SBA for compliance with program requirements set forth in the PPP Interim Final Rules and in the Borrower Application Form. If SBA determines in the course of its review that a borrower lacked an adequate basis for the required certification concerning the necessity of the loan request, SBA will seek repayment of the outstanding PPP loan balance and will inform the lender that the borrower is not eligible for loan forgiveness. If the borrower repays the loan after receiving notification from SBA, SBA will not pursue administrative enforcement or referrals to other agencies based on its determination with respect to the certification concerning necessity of the loan request. SBA's determination concerning the certification regarding the necessity of the loan request will not affect SBA's loan guarantee.